CYBER ATTACK RECOVERY PROCESS

CLAIM PROCESS

7

CASE STUDIES

Scenarios	Claim Process
Virus (Non email-related attack) John comes into the office in the morning and finds his computer being hacked. “We’ve taken over your company’s server, please contact bad-guys@badmail.com.ab”, shows the screen. He checks that all the wiring are intact and reboots the PC a few times, but the company is still unable to access all the data.	John calls the insurance broker for the recovery and claims. John still needs to pay for a small amount of deductible as specified by the insurance contract but as the quote from the cybersecurity expert is within the insurance policy limit, he does not need to pay the extra. Due to the interruption of business, John has a loss of revenue (with a track record of proven profits margin). John successfully proves that the attack was targeted to his business alone, thus he can claim loss of business interruption subject to time excess.
Phishing Email (Email-related attack) Peter is the owner of a trading company. One of his employee accidentally clicks on a malicious link in a phishing email and the ransomware GandCrab quickly spreads to the whole company, encrypting all files and demanding 200,000 HKD ransom to decrypt the files.	Peter calls Green Radar and the insurance company. Green Radar estimates the damage, the cost to recover and advises that Peter not to pay the ransom and other alternatives should be explored. The insurance company may assign a loss adjuster to assist the recovery and claiming process. Peter is able to decrypt his files and restores his systems. There are some expenses to Peter but his firm avoids a shut down that will significantly impact on his business.
